

THE 30-DAY MAKE-IT-STICK PLAN

Turn one good day into lasting change.

Most team building fades by Friday — not because the event was bad, but because nothing happened after it. This plan is the "after." Four short moves over 30 days that make the lesson stick, and prove it did.

WHAT'S INSIDE

| 1. Capture the one behavior | 3. The 30-day cadence |
| 2. The week-1 debrief script | 4. A measurement worksheet |

Move 1

BEFORE THE ENERGY FADES

Name the one behavior

Change sticks when it's specific and singular. Don't try to change five things. Pick the one behavior the event pointed at, and make it concrete.

The one thing we want more of after this:

e.g. "ask for help sooner," "disagree in the room, not after," "share context across teams."

Why it matters — what it costs us when we don't:

What it looks like in practice (so people recognize it):

Move 2

WITHIN 5 BUSINESS DAYS

Run the 20-minute debrief

A short, structured conversation while it's fresh. Four questions — go around the room, don't let it become a status update.

- | | |
|---|---|
| ☐ What stuck with you from the event, a week on? | ☐ What's one thing we should keep doing? |
| ☐ Where have you already seen the behavior — or missed a chance to? | ☐ Who will do what , by when? (write it down) |

Facilitator tip: the leader answers last, not first. If the boss frames the "right" answer up front, everyone else just agrees and the honesty is gone.

Move 3

SMALL, SPACED, DELIBERATE

The 30-day reinforcement cadence

Behavior change needs spaced repetition, not one big push. These touch points take minutes — the point is that they happen at all.

WHEN	THE MOVE	OWNER & NOTES
Day 1–2	Leader sends a short thank-you + names the one behavior + shares photos
Week 1	Run the 20-minute debrief (Move 2)
Week 2	Catch someone doing it right — call it out publicly
Week 3	Add the behavior to a recurring meeting as a 2-min check-in
Day 30	Review the measurement worksheet — what changed?

Why spacing works: people forget most of a one-off experience within a week. Four small reminders over a month beats one long follow-up session — this is the same principle behind why our programs run in touch points, not a single day.

Move 4

PROVE IT WORKED

The measurement worksheet

"Did it work?" shouldn't be a vibe. Connect the behavior to something leadership already tracks, take a baseline now, and check it at 30 days. Fill this in before you forget the starting point.

ELEMENT	YOUR ANSWER
The behavior from Move 1
The metric it connects to engagement, retention, cycle time, sales, CSAT...
Baseline today the number, right now
Target at 30 days
A simple signal something you can eyeball weekly
Day-30 result

Keep it honest: one real metric you'll actually track beats five you won't. If nothing moved, that's data too — it usually means the behavior wasn't reinforced often enough, not that people don't care.

THIS IS THE HARD PART — SO WE BUILT IT IN

Our programs make the follow-through automatic.

Doing this once is hard; doing it every time is why teams hire us. Our programs build the reinforcement and a 30-day measurement in from day one — so change isn't something you have to chase after the event. It's the design.
